Summary: 'Look above you, and you'll see I'm not a screw-up'. Hiccup is tired of being treated like a screw-up, even when he's doing well in dragon training... Mid-movie. Flight with Toothless. Poem from Hiccup's POV to the people of Berk.

Look Above You

Hello to the people who ignore me,

Look up and you'll spot me,

Riding on a dragon's back,

Rising above you—literally.

* * *

>Hello and goodbye,

We're going by way too fast,

His wings are beating the air,

He's blowing a fireball.

>I've given him back the power of flight,

And he, in turn, has given me the gift of a friend,

That quiet, secret confidence,

Burning inside you like fire when you know someone cares about you.

* * *

>We are flying above you,

In broad daylight,

But do you notice?

Do you even care?

* * *

>Do you ever consider,

That the screw-up of a Berk,

Has become the dragon rider?

Not a dragon killer, no.

* * *

>You might think I'm killing them or hurting them,

But I'm only being gentle,

And showing them,

It's okay to trust me.

>Look above you,

Squint high up into the sun,

You just might see, boy and dragon, dragon and boy,

Soaring in the sky.

>You might see the dark shape of his wings,

The imposter, his fake tail fin.

You might see a small boy clinging to his back,

You might see them shooting through the clouds.

>Look up above you,

And you'll see I'm not a screw-up.

I'm better than that,

And now I know it.

>So let me prove it to you.

Let me show you.

Take a deep breath,

And look above you.

End
file.
